| 1:00 pm to 2:30 pm | STS Hot Topics Discussion Group`@ Sheraton Denver Downtown, Windows`“Shifting Roles within Science Librarianship”In the past, many libraries and institutions have embraced the liaison model as a way of expanding subject specialists’ responsibilities. Liaison librarians have done outreach, department and curriculum support, instruction and community engagement in addition to collection development and reference. Today there are even more diverse changes to librarian roles. What are the successes and challenges associated with the current liaison model? What changes are we seeing in terms of roles, responsibilities, and expectations for science liaisons? Join John Meier (Pennsylvania State University), Laura Palumbo (Rutgers University), and Jeffra Bussmann (California State University at East Bay) to discuss the evolving expectations and shifting models of support for liaisons and subject specialists in STEM fields.

“Measuring Research Impact: What Really Counts?”
In recent years there has been a proliferation in the ways research impact can be measured. Traditional metrics such as citation counts and journal impact factors continue to fulfill an important measurement role but do not always tell the whole story. A variety of alternative metrics have added new ways of assessing the impact of a researcher’s work, but these may not always be well understood or appropriately valued. Please join us for an exploration and lively discussion of the roles libraries and librarians can play in assessing research impact in an increasingly competitive world. Panelists include:
- Ann Beynon, Manager, Solution Specialists, North America, Clarivate Analytics
- Sara Rouhi, Director of Engagement and Advocacy, Altmetric & Dimensions, Altmetric.com
- Emily C. Wild, Librarian (Physical Scientist), U.S. Geological Survey, Denver Library
Panel moderators will be Edward F. Lener (Virginia Tech) and Elizabeth Soergel (U. of Maryland).
